Cool! Thanks!

Here is the final SAB report ☺

Sounds reasonable. I presume the SAB comments will be shared along with the draft. Or are they available somewhere now? Sue

Thanks for sending your schedule, very good to know!!!

As for your part of the ERC review, we were thinking you could help with looking at the assessment to see if we've adequately clarified, in response to SAB concern, why certain studies pertaining to reproductive effects, or endpoints within studies, are emphasized over others. The SAB specifically recommended additional consideration of several reproductive endpoints including: cervical hyperplasia and cervical inflammation, ovarian follicular counts, and germ cell lesions.

Regarding male reproductive studies, has the assessment adequately considered the SAB's recommendation to consider post-treatment recovery time prior to endpoint measurement and the life stage when exposure occurs?

If you could spend next week focusing on these two things, that would be great.

Yikes. I will hardly have any time to review this (since I'm compressed on Friday, I would realistically only have next Mon-Fri), and I have several other tasks to work on before I leave. So it might depend on the amount of material and the level of review that's expected. Could I get a copy earlier than Friday? Sue

Dear reviewer,

I have gotten word that the draft BaP assessment will be ready for ERC review next week. I wanted to give you a heads up. Depending on when I get the draft, I'll established a deadline, understanding that some of you will likely be out of the office in the coming days.

Thanks for your patience!

Samantha
